The Anti Trust case over Microsoft should have never even started. It is apparent the only reason why it started was because NetScape and AOL paid off people to bring the case because they knew they couldn't beat Microsoft in the marketplace. Who would really want to have to pay for an Internet Browser when they get one for free? This new case AOL has brought is because they are fuming that MSN is getting bigger and bigger pieces of the market. It is called capitalism live with it and stop trying to bring your rival down with cheap tricks or file for chapter 11 and close down. In capitalism whoever is selling the better product for a cheaper price wins and AOL and Netscape needs to realize that and stop complaining to the government. What President Bush is doing by trying to keep out of the private business sector is a smart decision. Business doesn't need more government control and this how recession we are going through shows what happens when the government does try to control.
